THE CURRANT WORM. Life History of a Parasite Imported from Europe in 1858.

This insect has become most destruc-tive upon currants. Early in spring the four-winged flies emerge from the tough brown cocoons in which they have passed the winter, and deposit rows of small whitish, glassy eggs on the principal veins of the lower leaves of the current bushes. In about ten days small worms hatch and eat circular holes in the leaves, as shown in the illustration. At first these larvæ are whitish in color; they soon change to green, then green with numerous black spots, and at last back to a plain light green, with a tinge of yellow at the sides and ends. When full-grown

IMPORTED CURBANT WORMS PREDING leaves and rubbish at the surface of the ground. Within these they pupate and merge as flies early in summer to lay eggs for a second broad of worms. The winter is passed within eccoons be-neath the bushes. Hellebore is the best remedy for this pest. It may be applied as a dry powder, or in water one ounce to three gallons. The bushes should be treated soon after the small holes appear in the lower leaves, and again in about ten days -Orange Judd RATIONS FOR COWS. Chesp Feeding Is Not Economical in Any Sense.

Increasing attention is being given to the subject of food supplies for dairy cows. That much depends upon the quality and character of the food for a good quality of dairy product as well as to obtain a paying quantity, all must admit. A writer who furnishes a formula says that it has been abundantly proven that cows will do better on a nixed feed than they will on any single ration, no matter how good it may be in itself. High feeding-that is feeding for the maximum product-can also be done more cheaply by having a good variety of food, for with the single ration there will always be some elements which will not contribute toward the end for which you are feeding and so will be a loss. It is only by testing different mixtures, counting their cost and observing the results carefully, that one can tell just what is best adapted to his individual use. One thing is certain, and that is that cheap feeding is not often economical. Much cheap food may be used to good advantage by combining it wisely with more concentrated food. Even straw may be used to furnish a good share of the roughness for the dairy, but straw fed cattle alone could not be expected to make much return. A good rationbut not a cheap one-would be as follows: Ten pounds clover hay, ten pounds cut straw, four pounds linseed meal, four pounds corn meal, four pounds wheat bran, two pounds seed meal. Such a ratio ty to twenty-five cents per day, according to prices and location, and, of course, could only be fed to cows of possible profit in the dairy would be to have cows that would justify this and then feed them steadily to the top notch. In such a dairy the product would need to be upon as high a plane as the stock and feeding, and nothing but gilt-edged butter turned off .- West-

DAIRY SUGGESTIONS.

MILLET and Hungarian grass make good winter feed for the cows if cut early. If allowed to ripen their seeds the hay becomes of less value.

THERE is only one way to run a dairy successfully, and that is to make a business of it. The farm must be an adjunct to the dairy, not the dairy to the farm.

SEEM-MILE and young calves and pigs make a combination that grows into money rapidly. If the dairy does not combination is lacking.

Is feeding roots in the dairy, cut them up and mix with bran if you want to get the most food from both. Put in as much bran as can be well dampened with the juices. - Western Rural. FARM AND VINETARD Says: "Never take a lantern into the stable. Have a glass window flush with the inside wall, and a box outside with a small door, and set the lantern in this, let ting the light shine through the glass window." This is a good suggestion.

The destructive agent in Paris green or London purple, that is so largely used for putting onto potato plants to destroy bugs, is arsenic. Some are using the arsenic in its pure form to mix with water, says an exchange. It does not take so much of course used minand, occause: It is picturesque; it is quick; it is always on time.
